

INFORMATION TO USERS

This manuscript has been reproduced from the microfilm master. UMI films the text directly from the original or copy submitted. Thus, some thesis and dissertation copies are in typewriter face, while others may be from any type of computer printer.

The quality of this reproduction is dependent upon the quality of the copy submitted. Broken or indistinct print, colored or poor quality illustrations and photographs, print bleedthrough, substandard margins, and improper alignment can adversely affect reproduction.

In the unlikely event that the author did not send UMI a complete manuscript and there are missing pages, these will be noted. Also, if unauthorized copyright material had to be removed, a note will indicate the deletion.

Oversize materials (e.g., maps, drawings, charts) are reproduced by sectioning the original, beginning at the upper left-hand corner and continuing from left to right in equal sections with small overlaps. Each original is also photographed in one exposure and is included in reduced form at the back of the book.

Photographs included in the original manuscript have been reproduced xerographically in this copy. Higher quality 6" x 9" black and white photographic prints are available for any photographs or illustrations appearing in this copy for an additional charge. Contact UMI directly to order.

UMI

A Bell & Howell Information Company
300 North Zeeb Road, Ann Arbor MI 48106-1346 USA
313/761-4700 800/521-0600

PREVIEW

NOTE TO USERS

This reproduction is the best copy available

UMI

PREVIEW

A Study of Su Shih's "He-T'ao-shih" 和陶詩
(Matching-T'ao-poems)

A Thesis
Submitted to the Faculty of the Graduate School of the University of Minnesota
by

Benjamin Barclay Ridgway

IN PARTIAL FULFILLMENT OF THE REQUIREMENTS FOR THE DEGREE OF
MASTER OF ARTS

June, 1999

UMI Number: 1395301

Copyright 1999 by
Ridgway, Benjamin Barclay

All rights reserved.

UMI Microform 1395301
Copyright 1999, by UMI Company. All rights reserved.

This microform edition is protected against unauthorized copying under Title 17, United States Code.

UMI
300 North Zeeb Road
Ann Arbor, MI 48103

PREVIEW

© Benjamin Barclay Ridgway 1999

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA

This is to certify that I have examined this copy of a master's thesis by

Benjamin Barclay Ridgway

and have found that it is complete and satisfactory in all respects, and that any and all revisions required by the final examining committee have been made

YU-SHIH CHEN

Name of Faculty Adviser

Yu-Shih Chen

Signature of Faculty Adviser

June 14, 1999

Date

GRADUATE SCHOOL

Table of Contents:

1. Introduction	p.1
2. PART I: Themes and concepts in the poetry of T'ao Ch'ien	pp.2-4
3. PART II: The "Matching-T'ao" poems of Su Shih	pp.41-68
4. PART III: Reflections on "matching" 和 as "imaginative dialogue"	pp.68-73
5. Endnotes	pp.74-96
6. Bibliography	pp.97-103
7. APPENDIX 1: T'ao Ch'ien chronology	pp.104-120
8. APPENDIX 2: Su Shih chronology	pp.121-139
9. APPENDIX 3: Juxtaposed timeline, T'ao Ch'ien and Su Shih	p.140

A Study of Su Shih's "He-T'ao-shih" 和陶詩 (Matching-T'ao-poems)

Introduction

The topic of my M.A. thesis is a comparison between the themes and concepts of the poetry of T'ao Ch'ien 陶潛 (365-427) and the themes and concepts of the 120 'matching-T'ao' poems written by Su Shih 蘇軾 (1037-1101). In formal terms, 'matching' poems can be defined as the writing of a poem with the same rhymes (sometimes the exact same rhyme words) as those of a poem by another poet, generally a contemporary. The aim of this comparison is to investigate in what ways did Su Shih 'match' the poems of his predecessor, T'ao Ch'ien; that is including the formal qualities of 'matching' poems, at what specific times, under what conditions, and using what themes and concepts did Su Shih write his 'matching-T'ao' poems. Methodologically this study charts the poems of T'ao Ch'ien chronologically through the use of major nien-p'u 年譜 (chronological biography) and identifies landmark periods when poems of similar theme cluster together. This grouping of poems is grounded in a close reading of the diction and concepts used within and across poems, and it attempts to establish the themes of central concern which the poet expressed at different defining moments in his life. Then it studies Su Shih's "matching-T'ao-poems" in the same manner. Finally, it tries to interpret the meaning of "he 和 (matching)" in Su Shih's usage when he wrote the corpus of "He-T'ao-shih". The English translations of the poems by T'ao Ch'ien cited in Part I of this study are all from James Hightower's The Poetry of T'ao Ch'ien. Professor Hightower has kindly given me his written permission to use his translations. Translations of Su Shih's "matching-T'ao-poems", unless otherwise noted, are my own translations.

PART I

Themes and concepts in the poetry of T'ao Ch'ien

The first half of this project, charting the poems of T'ao Ch'ien and identifying central concepts and themes in his poetry, studies three major clusters of T'ao's poems: first, a cluster of poems written while T'ao Ch'ien was in service or farming during the years 401-406. Poems written in this period show a thematic dichotomy between what T'ao calls the "dusty world" (塵事, 塵網) and T'ao's "true vision" (眞想); second, a cluster of poems written largely after T'ao Ch'ien's retirement during the years 404-413 in which the central concern turns to focus on the concept of 化, change or transformation, and the meaning of human life in the context of the cosmological process of transformation; third, a cluster of poems written during the late years of T'ao Ch'ien's life from 417-423 in which there is a thematic shift away from the focus on the concept of 化 (transformation) to an overriding concern with history and a search for model figures in the past.

- I. Poems by T'ao Ch'ien written while in service or on the eve of retirement from office
(401-406): Poems of liberation and poems on farming
- 辛丑歲七月赴假還江陵夜行塗口 (401)
 - 癸卯歲始春懷古田舍二首 (403)
 - 癸卯歲十二月中作與從弟敬遠 (403)
 - 勸農 (403)
 - 始作鎮軍參軍經曲阿 (404)
 - 乙巳歲三月爲建威參軍使都經錢溪 (405)
 - 歸去來辭 (405)

- 歸園田居五首 (406)

During this five year period of 401 to 406, T'ao Ch'ien was in and out of official service, serving in four different positions with a brief period in between during which he withdrew and farmed for a living.¹ The poems that cluster around these years fall into two types: poems of liberation and poems on farming.

Poems of liberation: traveling while in official service

Among the "poems of liberation", there is a group of poems written while T'ao Ch'ien was traveling in official service.² These poems are notable for the documentation of the circumstances of the composition of each poem in its title (date and location) and for the description of the journey within the poem. Yet despite the attention to the external details of T'ao's official travels in the titles of these poems, the poems themselves convey little about the sites and scenes of T'ao's journeys and nothing about his official duties. They speak rather predominantly about his inner desire to return to the "fields and gardens":

辛丑歲七月赴假還江陵夜行
塗口 (401)

"Written at Tu-k'ou at Night during the Seventh Moon of the Year 401, while Returning to Chiang-ling after Leave"

閑居三十載
逐與塵事冥
詩書郭宿好
林園無世情
如何舍此去
遙遙至西荆
叩枹新秋月
臨流別友生
涼風起將夕

1	For thirty years I stayed quietly at home And kept my distance from the dusty world. The Classic Books remained my constant pleasure In grove and garden I had no ambitions.
5	Somehow I surrendered all of this To go far off to Chiang-ling in the west: Beating oars under a new autumn moon As we move away and I wave farewell to friends. A cool breeze rises, and evening comes on.
10	The night rays pour their empty radiance.

夜景湛虛明
 昭昭天宇闊
 晶晶川上平
 懷役不遑寐
 中宵尚孤征
 商歌非吾事
 依依在耦耕
 投冠旋舊居
 不爲好爵榮
 養真衡茅下
 庶以善自名⁴

Luminous the spreading vault of Heaven
 Fulgent the smooth surface of the stream.
 Mindful of my mission, I cannot sleep,
 At midnight still the lonely boat goes on.
 15 I am not one to volunteer my services,
 I only yearn to lead a farmer's life,
 To give up the job and go back to my old place-
 I will not be bound by love of rank.
 To cultivate the True in my poor hut
 20 Is perhaps the best thing I can do.³

This first of T'ao's poems on traveling in official service, written three years after he began service under Huan Hsuan 桓玄 in 398⁵, opens with three couplets looking back to T'ao Ch'ien's early life. The first two couplets recall T'ao's own predilection to pore over the Classic Books among groves and gardens before he took up his first official office in 393.⁶ However, these fondly remembered earlier years were given up in exchange for government service in the dusty world (塵事, dusty affairs). He wonders at the impetus behind this change of calling and asks, "How did I surrender all of this, to go far off to Chiang-ling in the west?".

Then description of the journey follows: lines 9 and 10 describe the cool breeze blowing in the clear night air, while lines 11 through 14 contrast the vast "spreading vault of Heaven" and "smooth surface of the stream" with the sleepless poet on his "lonely mission" traveling at midnight.

The last three couplets move from the description of scene and emotion of his as a traveler to a declaration of his aspiration (志). T'ao Ch'ien calls attention to this movement through allusion in lines 15 and 16, "'The Shang mode' is no affair of mine, I only yearn 'to plow in pairs'". 'The Shang mode' refers to the story in the Huai Nan Tzu 淮南子 which recounts how when Ning Ch'i 甯戚 sang the Shang mode beneath the chariot of Duke Huan of Ch'i 齊桓公, the Duke decided to make Ning Ch'i his advisor.⁷ 'To plow in pairs' alludes to two farmer-hermits Confucius encountered in the Analects, Chang-chü 長沮 and Jie-ni 桀溺.⁸ Lines 17 and 18 follow with T'ao's symbolic gesture of throwing away the official's cap to "turn back to" (旋) his "poor hut" and his vow of not "to be bound by rank". In the final couplet (l. 19-20) T'ao Ch'ien declares his aspiration to "cultivate the True" (養真); it is the best thing he can do.

This theme of leaving the world of government service to return to books, woods and gardens becomes the defining concern in the following poems on giving up the world (塵事) in preference of "cultivating the true" (養真). In the following poems we also see a gradual cohesion of "truth" or "authenticity" (真) with a desired past. And this desired tradition in the past, in turn, becomes spatially identified with T'ao Ch'ien's fields and gardens (園田) in the present.

The second poem written while traveling in official service also begins with a recollection of T'ao Ch'ien's early life:

始作鎮軍參軍經
曲阿 (404)

Lines written as I passed through Ch'u-o,
On First Being Made Adviser to the General

弱齡寄事外
委懷在琴書
被褐欣自得
屢空恆晏如
時來苟冥會
宛轡憩通衢
投策命晨裝 暫與園田疏

1

When young I kept aloof from the world's affairs
And found my comfort in books and cither,
Happily content with homespun clothes,
Always satisfied though often empty.

5

Something quite by chance and unforeseen
Made me pull the reins and stop in the road.
I dropped my staff and had my luggage packed
And for a time took leave of fields and garden.

眇眇孤舟逝		Far, far away the lonely boat departs,
綿綿歸思紆	10	Enduring thoughts of home still bind me fast.
我行豈不遠		Is this journey not a distant one-
登降千里餘		By land and water over a thousand miles?
目倦川途異		My eyes are weary with strange roads and rivers
心念山澤居		My heart yearns to stay in hills and lakes.
望雲慚高鳥	15	I look at the clouds and envy the high flying birds
臨水愧遊魚		Beside the stream I am shamed by the free swimming fish.
眞想初在襟		From the beginning my breast held this vision of truth-
誰謂形跡拘		Let no one say I have been bound by externals.
聊且憑化遷		I shall just give myself to the course of transformation
終反班生廬 ⁹	20	And return in the end to the hut of Master Pan. ¹⁰

The opening four couplets describe a longed-for past in which the present journey is framed. Here, T'ao Ch'ien says that in his early adulthood (弱齡, literally 'at the age of twenty') he lodged himself outside of the world's affairs (事外) and found his pleasure in 'books and cither'. The first couplet is reminiscent of the opening of the previous poem. It is followed by the second couplet describing a youth content in poverty. At that time he "wore coarse cloth"(被褐) but found satisfaction even when he "often went empty"(屢空).¹¹ Then in lines 5-8 he attempts to explain how he left this gratifying life, employing the image of a carriage and the trope of 'life as a journey'. Seemingly by accident "a time came (when there was) an obscure encounter" and T'ao "had to pull the reins and stop in the road". The trope of 'life as a journey' is important not only because it is a trope T'ao uses repeatedly, but also because it suggests the twin possibilities of departure and return. Once a person has set out on a journey (by carriage or boat) he may continue down the road, he may stop, or he may want to call it off and return to where he began. 'Life as a journey' used in this way is a metaphor in time and space which downplays the temporal change and eludes questions about whether a return to 'things the way they were' is really possible. Here we discern a shift in the level of poetic expression from the concrete and active in the present to the contemplative and emotive in a realm outside of time. This second a-temporal level of 'return' (歸, 反, 旋) is layered onto the actual journey back home in the present. Lines 7 and 8 complete T'ao's recollection of the beginning of his journey, "I threw away my staff and ordered the morning preparations" (投策命晨裝) but hold out the promise of his eventual return, "and for a time parted from fields and gardens" (暫與園田疏). The time expression in line 8, "for a time" 暫, and the rhyme word, "to be separated from" 疏 together suggest a displacement in time and space the meaning of which is yet undeveloped at that particular juncture.

In the next four couplets (lines 9-16) T'ao turns from his recollection to a description of the ongoing journey in a boat suffused with subjective emotion. In line 9, reduplicating binomes parallel the great distance into which T'ao's lonely boat traverses (眇眇孤舟逝), but his thoughts are in the opposite direction (l. 10 綿綿歸思紆 and also in ll. 11-14, 目倦川途異/心念山澤居). With lines 15 and 16 the landscape becomes wholly symbolic of T'ao's aspirations, "I look at the clouds and envy the high flying birds, Beside the stream I am shamed by the free swimming fish". Li Shan's commentary on this couplet is apt, "(The poet) says that fish and birds have both attained their environment and it is he alone that is distanced from his nature".¹² Images of birds and fish free in their natural environment here symbolize the freedom T'ao Ch'ien hopes to recover for himself.

In line 17 T'ao returns to his "vision of truth" (眞想) The time word "from the beginning" (初) there suggests again that T'ao's "vision of truth" is associated with his early life and his "fields and garden". Later in 406, the year in which T'ao Ch'ien withdrew from officialdom for good, he stated in the preface to "The Return" 歸去來辭 thus: "Hunger and cold may be sharp, but this going against myself really sickens me. Whenever I have been involved in official life I was mortgaging myself to mouth and belly"¹³. T'ao seems to be aware of the possible implications of withdrawing from official life when he states in the final couplet of this poem: "I shall just give myself to the course of transformation, And return in the end to the hut of Master Pan".

"Transformation" (化) is a concept whose locus classicus is the philosophy of Chuang-tzu 莊子, where it refers to the ceaseless transformation of all phenomena. This concept becomes the dominant theme in poems from T'ao Ch'ien's middle period (408-413), but here it may just indicate T'ao's willingness to endure the vicissitudes of life until the time comes when he can return (反) to the hut of "Master Pan".

The two poems above show a movement from T'ao Ch'ien's recollection of his earlier life, to description of interweaving scene and emotion in the present, to a projection of possible actions in the future. The dichotomy between T'ao's involvement with the "dusty affairs" of officialdom in the present and his nostalgia for his early life and his yearning for the freedom of birds and fish in the future is presented on two different levels: action in the present, and emotional yearning for a return to the past in some future time. The present moment of travel in official capacity documented in the titles is then framed between the desired past and a vow to return in the future.

Poems on farming: "Thinking of the ancients on my farm"

In 403, a year in between T'ao's service under Huan Hsuan (398-401) and his service under Liu Yu 劉裕 as the Advisor to the General (404) he wrote "In Early Spring of the Year 403, Two Poems in Praise of Ancient Farmers" 癸卯歲始春懷古田舍二首 (403) and also "For my Cousin Ching-yuan, Written in the Twelfth Month 403" 癸卯歲十二月中作與從弟敬遠. It is believed that T'ao Ch'ien was supporting himself in 402-403 by farming in his home town of Ch'ai-sang 柴桑.

癸卯歲始春懷古田舍二首
(403)

#1

在昔聞南畝 當年竟未踐 屢空既有人
春興豈自免
夙晨裝吾駕
啓途情已緬
鳥弄歡新節
冷風送餘善
寒竹被荒蹊
地爲人罕遠
是以植杖翁
悠然不復反
即理愧通識
所保詎乃淺

In Early Spring of the Year 403, Two Poems in Praise of Ancient Farmers

I

1 I had read of farmers in the past
But young, had not the least experience.
There was the man who went often empty,
And so I cannot escape spring's proddings.
5 At early dawn I hitch my wagon
And start along the road, my mind detached;
The birds sing of their joy in the new season
A gentle breeze brings abundant good,
Hardy bamboo covers the overgrown path
10 The passerby so few one feels alone.
This is why the Old Man with the Staff
Was content never to return to the world.
In truth I scorn the role of opportunist
What I am doing is not wholly worthless.¹⁴

癸卯歲始春懷古田舍二首
(403)

#2

先師有遺訓
憂道不憂貧 瞻望邈難逮 轉欲志常勤

II

1 For us the Ancient Teacher left the lesson,
Be concerned with truth, not poverty.
It is a goal far-off and hard to reach,
I will accept lifelong toil instead.
5 I hold the plow and rejoice in the season's work,

秉耒歡時務
解顏勸農人
平疇交遠風
良苗亦懷新
雖未量歲功
即事多所欣
耕種有時息
行者無問津
日入相與歸
壺漿勞近鄰
長吟掩柴門 聊爲隴畝民¹⁶

With happy face I urge the farmers on.
A far wind blows across the level field
The tender shoots enfold a new life too.
Although the yield is yet to be assessed
10 The work itself has much to give me joy.
The plowing and planting are over for the time
And no one comes to ask about the ford.
When the sun sets we all go home together
And there I share a drink with my neighbors.
15 Then humming to myself I close the door:
I may just as well lead a farmer's life.¹⁵

These two poems display an effective weaving of allusion into descriptions of T'ao's natural surroundings and farming activities. Coloring the descriptions of farming in the field in early Spring, there is a subjective strain of buoyant optimism and hope. The allusions to Yen Hui 顏回 and "the Old Man with the Staff 植杖翁" have the effect of contextualizing T'ao's choice of taking on the role of a farmer in an ancient tradition.¹⁷ The first poem in this pair opens with two couplets (lines 1-4) on T'ao's early life similar to what we have seen in the traveling poems above. Lines 3 and 4 move from a poverty stricken figure in the past to his own immediate present, "There was the man who went often empty, and so I cannot escape spring's proddings".¹⁸ Here T'ao establishes a very complex relation between himself and Yen Hui. One way to read this relation is to see the similarity between the two, "Since there was Yen Hui (who endured want as I do now), how could I escape spring's proddings?". Another reading of the couplet is to see the difference, "Since there was Yen Hui (who though in want did not labor as a farmer as I do), how could I avoid spring's proddings?". The ambiguity of the allusion appears to be intentional, as T'ao Ch'ien first raises a Confucian exemplary figure of the past, with whom he at least partially identifies, and then turns (轉) rhetorically away from him, to look toward his present concerns.¹⁹ These present concerns are defined by the first two characters in line 4, "the spring proddings" or "the spring incitements" (春興), for this pair of poems concerns T'ao's first efforts at farming and the feelings that go with that undertaking.

T'ao's description of his life of farming (lines 5-10), like his descriptions of travel on official business, are suffused with subjective feelings. But there is a sense of immediacy, a concern for the moment here that is not present in the traveling poems. T'ao dramatizes this description as he "hitches his wagon at early dawn" and "start along the road, my mind detached". The farm scene was thus described in lines 7-10:

鳥弄歡新節
冷風送餘善
寒竹被荒蹊
地爲人罕遠

The birds sing of their joy in the new season
A gentle breeze brings abundant good
Hardy bamboo covers the overgrown path
10 The passersby so few one feels alone.

Lines 7 and 8 convey T'ao's joy in the scene and his hopes for the "new season" (新節), an apt metaphor for the beginning of a new way of life as well. Lines 9 and 10 describe the remoteness and inaccessibility of T'ao's farm.

T'ao then contemplates ancient examples of taking on farming as a way of life through an allusion to the "Old Man with the Staff" in the Analects in (ll. 11 and 12)

是以植杖翁
悠然不復反

This is why the Old Man with the Staff
Was content never to return to the world.

This is the first of two allusions to the "Wei Tzu" 微子 section (Book 18) in the Analects 論語, where Confucius' encounters with farmer-hermits is given. Needless to say, T'ao Ch'ien completely inverts the original didactic intent of the passage alluded to in the Analects by taking the farmer-hermit 植杖翁 as his past model.²⁰ The last couplet (lines 13-14) philosophizes on the two dichotomized ways of life; public service and farming:

即理愧通識
所保詎乃淺

In truth I scorn the role of opportunist
What I am doing is not wholly worthless

The second poem of "In Early Spring of the Year 403, Two Poems in Praise of Ancient Farmers" 癸卯歲始春懷古田舍二首 displays a similar interweaving of allusion to exemplary figures in the past with descriptions of T'ao Ch'ien's farming life in the immediate present. The opening two couplets again allude to Yen Yuan in the Analects then opt for a different course:

先師有遺訓
憂道不憂貧²¹
瞻望邈難逮²²
轉欲志常勤

1 For us the Ancient Teacher left the lesson,
Be concerned with truth, not poverty.
It is a goal far-off and hard to reach,
I will accept lifelong toil instead.

Here, T'ao Ch'ien modestly states that he cannot rise up to Yen Yuan's example and therefore can only turn to a different mode of existence.

The following six couplets in the poem (lines 5-16) describe the concrete content of this alternative mode of a farmer's life, showing T'ao at work in the fields, at rest, and returning home at sunset. Lines 7 through 10 turn to the cyclical renewal of nature in spring and T'ao's contemplating the season's prospects,

平疇交遠風
良苗亦懷新
雖未量歲功
即事多所欣

A far wind blows across the level field
The tender shoots enfold a new life too.
Although the yield is yet to be assessed
10 The work itself has much to give me joy.

The poem closes with the ending of a farmer's day and the satisfaction that accompanies a day's work (lines 11-16),

耕種有時息
行者無問津²³
日入相與歸
壺漿勞近鄰
長吟掩柴門
聊爲隴畝民

The plowing and planting are over for the time
And no one comes to ask about the ford.
When the sun sets we all go home together
And there I share a drink with my neighbors.
15 Then humming to myself I close the door:
I may just as well lead a farmer's life.

Here, a second allusion to an example of another ancient farmer from the same chapter in the Analects is made (line 12) and the poem now comfortably settles itself into the context of the ancient tradition.

The third poem from 403 "For my Cousin Ching-yuan, Written in the Twelfth Month 403" 癸卯歲十二月中作與從弟敬遠 approaches the choice of principled poverty as a way of life from a significantly different angle, namely: the hardship that is part and parcel of a life that tries to be "firm in adversity 固窮".

癸卯歲十二月中作與
從弟敬遠 (403)

For my Cousin Ching-yuan, Written in the Twelfth Month
403

寐跡衡門下
邈與世相絕
顧眄莫誰知
荆扉晝常閉
淒淒歲暮風
翳翳經日雪
傾耳無希聲
在目皓已潔
勁氣侵襟袖

Behind a rustic gate I hid my traces
Cut off from contact with the distant world.
I look to see, but no one's there who knows.
Days the rustic gate is always closed.
5 Chill, chill the wind at the end of the year
Concealing all, the snow the whole day through.
I bend my ear and hear not the least sound
Before my eyes is only purest white.
The sharp air invades my sleeves and robe,
10 Rice bin and wine gourd decline too frequent calls.

簞瓢謝屢設		It is dismal in an empty house
蕭索空宇中		Without a single thing to take joy in.
了無一可悅		In reading books of a thousand years ago
歷覽千載書		From time to time I find heroic models.
時時見遺烈	15	Such high examples I do not aspire to
高操非所攀		But might at best be firm in adversity.
謬得固窮節		Since I will not take the easy way,
平津苟不由		Being idle is not just ineptness.
栖遲詎爲拙	20	I'll let my message ride outside the words-
寄意一言外		Who but you can interpret this pledge? ²⁴
茲契誰能別 ²⁵

It is winter and it is windy and snowing outside (lines 5-12). Then the inside of T'ao's dwelling is described; T'ao is cold and hungry in his house:

勁氣侵襟袖		The sharp air invades my sleeves and robe,
簞瓢謝屢設 ²⁶	10	Rice bin and wine gourd decline too frequent calls.
蕭索空宇中		It is dismal in an empty house
了無一可悅		Without a single thing to take joy in.

Commentators identify (簞瓢) in line 10 as an allusion to the well-known description of Yen Hui's contentment in poverty. A twentieth-century T'ao Ch'ien scholar, Yang Yong, however, reads line 10 as one piece of evidence that T'ao's harvest in this year of farming was insufficient to meet his needs.²⁷ And we can see in lines 11 and 12 that T'ao Ch'ien is no Yen Yuan after all, as he earlier admits in the second poem of "In Early Spring of the Year 403, Two Poems in Praise of Ancient Farmers" 癸卯歲始春懷古田舍二首, for he is "without a single thing to take joy in". The admission of his own inability to measure up to ancient models in adversity continues in lines 13-20:

歷覽千載書		In reading books of a thousand years ago
		From time to time I find heroic models.

時時見遺烈	15	Such high examples I do not aspire to
高操非所攀		But might at best be firm in adversity.
謬得固窮節 ²⁸		Since I will not take the easy way,
平津苟不由		Being idle is not just ineptness.
栖遲詎爲拙		I'll let my message ride outside the words-
寄意一言外	20	Who but you can interpret this pledge?
茲契誰能別

T'ao does struggle to emulate the ancient "heroic models", but the use of negative and interrogative particles in the concluding lines of the poem register a moment of frustration and doubt in T'ao Ch'ien about the meaning and value of those hardships in adversity.²⁹

Poems of liberation 2: The Return

In the eleventh month of 405 T'ao resigned from the official post of magistrate of P'eng-tze 彭澤令, an office he held for "some eighty days". In the preface to "The Return" 歸去來辭, T'ao states his thoughts and his rationale for leaving officialdom,

I was poor, and what I got from farming was not enough to support my family. The house was full of children, the rice-jar was empty, and I could not see any way to supply the necessities of life. Friends and relatives kept urging me to become a magistrate, and I had at last come to think I should do it, but there was no way for me to get such a position. At the time I happened to have business abroad and made a good impression on the grandees as a conciliatory and humane sort of person. Because of my poverty an uncle offered me a job in a small town, but the region was still unquiet and I trembled at the thought of going away from home. However P'eng-tze was only thirty miles from my native place, and the yield of the fields assigned the magistrate was sufficient to keep me in wine, so I applied for the office. Before many days had passed, I longed to give it up and go back home. Why, you may ask. Because my instinct is all for freedom, and will not brook discipline or restraint. Hunger and cold may be sharp, but this going against myself really sickens me. Whenever I have been involved in official life I was mortgaging myself to my mouth and belly, and the realization of this greatly upset me.³⁰

"The Return" and another group of five poems written in the following year (406),

"Returning to the Farm to Dwell, five poems" 歸園田居五首, reiterate the clash that T'ao feels between his "instinct...for freedom" (which he calls in earlier poems what is